INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. – Dow AgroSciences has added expert support to its turf and ornamental business.

Chris Moyer has been named marketing communications manager supporting both the T&O and pest management businesses. He joined Dow AgroSciences in 2011 as a T&O sales representative covering eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Before that, he worked as a golf course superintendent for more than 20 years. He has a bachelor's degree in agronomy from The Ohio State University and a master's degree in business administration from Tiffin University.

Moyer is replaced by Tara Beauregard, who joined The Dow Chemical Company in 2011 as a production scheduler and recently worked as a production planner for Dow AgroSciences. She earned a master's degree in strategic management from Davenport University and served in the U.S. Armed Forces as a logistical specialist for six years.

In the West, David Martin has been named district sales manager for urban pest management, overseeing seven T&O sales representatives. He has been with Dow AgroSciences since 2009, most recently serving as the product manager for chlorpyrifos and Transform WG insecticide in the Midwest. Martin received a bachelor's degree in agricultural communication from the University of Georgia.
