THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. – The Green Industry Speakers Bureau, launched in December 2011, recently added these speakers to its growing roster of presenters:

- Elliott Schaffer with more 30 years experience in the industry. He has conducted more than 8,000 property evaluations.

- Rodney L. Bailey, a specialist in financial management, strategic planning, organization development, systems & controls, operations management, industrial engineering, and marketing & sales for the landscape industry

- Beth Dockins, director of customer service for Scotts LawnService in Marysville, Ohio, a respected keynote speaker for customer service, green industry and call center events

- Rachel Hulan who developed and taught courses in sustainable design at several state universities in California.

- Michael Monji, a certified arborist, QAL, master gardener, and a clinical laboratory scientist. He's the host of the "Home and Garden Show" on KNZR radio.

- Barbara Collins who offers seminars on horticultural topics. She's the author of "Landscaping Herbs and Professional Interior Plantscaping," and has worked a number of years in the interior plantscaping industry.

Kelle McMahon, the CEO of The Green Science Academy headquartered in Oakland, Calif. She works closely with businesses and organizations to develop skills that will assist workers in developing and implementing a clear path of movement to a sustainable and healthy career.

"Our agency is quickly becoming the place where conference, convention and trade show planners can locate and hire the very best professional speakers to fill their educational and business agenda," claims Robin Westmiller, speakers bureau president.

"The subscription form is found on the main page of our website at greenindustryspeakers.com, which also lists completed speaker profiles, topics, speaker request forms, and booking information," she adds.
